There was not a meeting today - Thanksgiving week

The holiday's origin was a celebration of making it through tough times; of receiving bountiful harvests; and of having family, friends and acquaintances around to help in the sharing of gratitude and good fortunes. It is still a time for those things these days. In our electronic age where news and other communications are available truly at the speed of light; in the one-to-one and one-to-many and many-to-one messaging that occur through a multitude of social media channels; and in our always available (except when driving) cell phone talk and text, the knowledge of worldwide events provide us with opportunities to be aware of even more things for which to be thankful. Those technologies bring us all the world's information, both good and bad. It is for us to remember that there are always positive occurrences to be found. We understand that the horrible happenings will not just go away if we ignore them, but we should also understand that there are substantial mental, physical and social benefits to be derived, both immediate and in the future, from concentrating on the positives. We are obviously thankful for our first responders; for the military folks that work to keep us safe; for the heroes that assist others in times of difficulty; the parents that do without so that their children don't have to; and for our own personal families; our experiences, our relationships, and our overall existence... All for which we are grateful. As discussions of our 55th anniversary have reminded us, our EAGA group can be uniquely thankful for what has made our organization a success. Our history has made us who we currently are; and how we progress from here will form the future successes for which the next generation will be thankful. Thank you to all for your involvement, for the camaraderie, the knowledge and the experiences. We all continue to benefit from your sharing. A special note of thanks to those among us that have unique challenges that must be overcome. Your amazing mental and personal inner strength provides us with very positive vibes. Your example imparts an attitude of success and as such, a positive influence on those around you. It will be great to share in your ultimate successful win. And finally, Thank You to the directors of EAGA, the current and past officers and the over 100 past presidents that have provided the positive guidance for our success. Page two of this bulletin provides the names of some of those past presidents. The more recent ones will be listed in future publications.
