Moji Cinema owner Paul Jew is helping businesses and nonprofit organizations transform their message into measurable impact through strategic video production and storytelling. Since launching Moji Cinema in 2015, Jew has focused on helping organizations improve engagement, recruiting, fundraising, and marketing effectiveness by creating videos that clarify complex ideas and connect emotionally with audiences.

According to Jew, Moji Cinema's approach goes beyond traditional videography by focusing on outcomes first. The company works with clients to define messaging, identify target audiences, and strategically deploy video content across websites, presentations, recruiting campaigns, and social platforms. Moji Cinema has partnered with businesses, nonprofits, and institutions across New Mexico and the United States, producing brand stories, recruiting campaigns, fundraising videos, and marketing content designed to deliver long-term value and measurable ROI.

Jew, whose family has owned businesses in Albuquerque since 1929, brings decades of entrepreneurial and visual storytelling experience to the company. His passion for preserving meaningful stories and helping locally owned businesses grow continues to position Moji Cinema as a leading creative partner for organizations seeking stronger communication and audience engagement.
